DO YOU KNOW HER?

WHITE FLY TRUSTEES 'DECEIVED,' SAYS FITZGERALD

If you can identify this dark-haired, 17-year-old "mystery girl," please communicate with the Boston Evening American (Tel. LU 1000) or with the Lynn police. They picked her up today after she was found wandering the streets. Names she gave proved fictitious.

NARROW GAUGE TO REORGANIZE

Seeking authority to reorganize under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, the Boston-Revere Beach-Lynn Railroad, widely known as the "Narrow Gauge," filed a petition in bankruptcy with the clerk of Federal Court today.

The railroad listed assets and liabilities at $1,532,777, as of May 1. Vote to reorganize was made yesterday by stockholders and officers of the corporation, because "the railroad is unable to meet its debt and desires to reorganize," the petition stated.

It was signed by Walter P. Remond, president of the railroad.

Wandering Girl, 17, Proves Puzzle To Lynn Police

Giving a series of fictitious names and addresses, a black-haired, 17-year-old girl, picked up today while wandering the streets in Lynn, proved to be an enigma to Lynn police.

A bandage around her ankle also told police, was put there at some hospital yesterday, after she had explained the ankle getting off a street car while on a trip from Chelsea to Hyde Park.

She said a passerby took her to the hospital where she "ran away." She professed not to know the hospital's name or location.

After giving several other names, with fictitious addresses, she finally stated today that her name is Mary Perry and that she lived at 192 South Main street, West End, before her father, Samuel Perry, placed her in a home from which she "ran away." But the numbers do not go to that high in South Main street.

Bedford police took her into Lynn on a charge of being a runaway. The case was continued until Thursday by Judge John J. Pheasant and was held in $500.

'CRUSAIDERS' AND TEACHER IN BATTLE

Excitement over the status of pretty Isabelle Hallin, Saugus' outstanding school teacher, reached fever pitch today, as the zero hour in her fight approached.

Two new Saugus pastors announced their intentions of entering the battle when the school committee meets tonight to reconsider its 32 vote giving Miss Hallin leave to resign.

At the same time, a delegation representing 200 Saugus Graduates, a new civic organization, formed counsel for the teacher that they would back her to the hilt.

In the midst of all this, W. R. Russell, one of the school board members who voted against Miss Hallin, issued a statement denying that his faction had ever heard of the much-discussed "crusader" party rumored to have been behind the school board vote.

SAYS PARTY NO FACTOR

"I am speaking for the majority of the board when I say that the first the board knew of any cocktail party rumors was after the vote was taken," he asserted.

"We knew nothing about any such thing. It had no bearing on the case. Any injury to reputation of people as a result of this rumor being circulated is not our responsibility."

The "cocktail party" story, which Miss Hallin has branded from the very first as ridiculous, alleged that during a high school dramatic society rehearsal, the teacher, on returning to her home, accepted refreshments and cigarettes.

TEACHER HILL

Attorney Daniel J. Canning, counsel for the embattled young teacher, was quick to take up Russell's statement. He said that when Russell spoke "for the majority" he presumed he meant for himself, for Miss Mary E. Smith and for Harry E. Wadsworth.

"They're on the run now," Attorney Canning said.

Backs Birth Control as Trial Opens

North Shore Women
Jam Salem Court

Salem, July 12 (AP)—Even though the state presents the sale of birth control devices, it is not only the right of a doctor to act contrary to law but the duty of a woman's life is endangered. Dr. Pierre A. Johnson, prominent Harvard surgeon, testified in district court today.

Dr. Johnson appeared as a defense witness at the hearing on Massachusetts birth control "test case" which opened here today before Judge George B. Sears.

Following Dr. Johnson to the stand, and corroborating his testimony in substance, were Dr. Robert L. DeNormandie, famed Boston obstetrician, and Dr. Malcolm Herold of Marshfield.

COURTROOM JAMMED

The case, which drew a courtroom jammed with spectators, including many prominent North Shore women, grew out of a police raid on the North Shore Mother Health Office June 3, in which anti-life pamphlets and records were seized.

The defendants are Dr. Lucille Lord Houshite, physician at the clinic; Frances Rand, a nurse; Miss Carolyn G. Gifford, wife of Dr. Stuart N. Gardner, chief of St. Mary's hospital; and Dr. Charles W. Smith, physician, all charged with assisting in birth control.

On June 22 Judge Sears denied the petition of the health officer that property should be returned and after brief arguments he continued the case until July 12.

Called as the first defense witness.

Boston's 61 Is Near Record July Chill

Capricious Nature doubt Boston one of the coldest July days in the records today in the wake of a seven-day record heat wave.

At 10 a. m. the temperature stood at 61, only five degrees warmer than the coldest July 12 in the history of the Boston weather bureau. The coldest was 56, in 1888.

Warmed July 13 to record is 92, in 1894.

Hardly combined with low temperature today in a penetrating chill, to some persons a welcome relief from last week's heat. The humidity was 89 degrees today.

Return of warm weather in the past part of the week is promised by the weatherman, but a more seasonable temperature warmth will hold throughout July, he said.

GALE PERILS FIND HUNT FOR AMELIA

By PAUL BROOK
International News Service
Staff Correspondent

Aboard U.S.S. Lexington, July 12. By nightfall the 61 planes about this big aircraft carrier, now poised for a mass takeoff, will have patrolled 60,000 square miles of ocean made in the South Pacific, seeking Amelia Earhart and her companion, Captain Fred Noonan, lost since July 2.

Tropical storms and a low ceiling made visibility difficult. However, planes sent the Lexington's air armada into the overcast skies were not changed. Tailfins of the planes today would be pumpeled only if the weather gets worse, officials said.

When the navy aviators make their report to Captain J. D. Dwyer, commander of the Lexington, the tale of the hunt will be almost definitely established—one way or the other.

LITTLE HOPE LEFT

Most of the Lexington's hopes for finding Miss Earhart's $50,000 "flying laboratory" forced two near Howland Island on a 200-mile trip from Lae, New Guinea, to the Hawaiian Islands.

However, there was optimistic aviation felt that one of the highly trained navy scouts would find the plane perhaps on desolate Howland Reef, 200 miles south of Howland.

The Gilbert Islands, 400 miles west of Howland, also will be searched during the mass patrol flights, which will be safeguarded by three destroyers now taking up strategic positions in mid-Pacific.

SEARCH TO EXPAND

The search will not be abandoned after the initial 60,000 square miles surrounding Howland has been covered. Instead, Captain Dwyer will include an area of 200,000 square miles, if still no trace of the lost fliers is found, the hunt then will be abandoned.

Three catapult planes of the U. S. S. Hornet, based at the Phoenix Islands, a little group 200 miles south of Howland. This search was unavailing.

The Hornet, after refueling its destroyers, Lammont, and Cushing, proceeded to its base at Eniwetok, a group of islands.

Three destroyers assumed positions in the Pacific Ocean today. The guard the Lexington's airman during the patrol flights.

Admits, Then Denies, Slaying in Somerville

A 16-year-old vagabond who calls himself John L. Burns, confessed to the murder of Miss Margaret "Peggy" McCarthy of Somerville today, but under questioning by Springfield police later repudiated the "confession."

The girl was strangled and killed in a field in the rear of the Harvard Divinity school in Cambridge on September 8, 1933, and since then a widespread search has been made for Harry P. Cahill, one-time Somerville and Lawrence resident, indicted in the crime.

Burns was picked up on the outskirts of Springfield. As he was being booked at police headquarters, authorities said, he suddenly burst out with a story of the slaying the 16-year-old Peggy.

Burns, it was determined, had served a year at the Worcester State Hospital and had been released last week, but returned after the Worcester Hospital had released him.

At Springfield, after he had repudiated his murder story, he was strangled as a vagabond and held in 1400 for a hearing on July 21. Meanwhile, his description will be forwarded to all principal cities to determine if he is wanted in any of them.

Jim Roosevelt Denies Tax-Dodging Charge

Washington, July 12 (AP)—Approving himself before the congressional tax committee, James Roosevelt today flatly denied that he had any stock in a Bahamas holding company for the purpose of tax avoidance.

Answering charges made before the committee by Representative Phil H. Hays of New York, the President's son declared:

"I have never held such stock and know nothing of the existence of any phantasmic copies of incorporation papers showing that I do."

He said he did not know a "Mr. Dancy" of New York City whom Hays had accused was president of the phantasmic company.

"I understand, however, that Mr. Burns has denied possessing them," Roosevelt said.

"I would like to say that I have had no connection directly or indirectly with any foreign holding company."

Something Cheerful

About Wrestling:

Casey vs. O'Mahony

THE TIME HAS COME TO SAY SOMETHING cheerful about wrestling. So I will talk about the Irish countryside whence sprang Steve Casey and Dan O'Mahony, the Celtic canvas kissers who are entwining at Fenway Park one week from tonight.

Geologically there is not much difference between the coasts of West Cork and South Kerry, where Paul "Bring 'em back alive" Bowser snared these stout specimens. The fingers of land which stretch toward the warm depths of the Atlantic, the tumbled land behind the hillsides peppered with boulders, the sense of suspended time. Both are the same.

The men of South Kerry go down to the sea for hake, plaice and tuna, and the men in the hills of West Cork grow green from the soil and shepherd their black faced, horned sheep. Life is earnest, joys are simple, folk are honest.

I don't know whether the natives of the neighboring regions will stay up late to listen to the results of the match on the air. Dan's people seemed a little disillusioned last April, and the folk around Snerem had hardly warmed to Casey's career.

Still, this one may be different, and the powers may turn the tone loose on pure competitive form, so that the Schoolmaster of Ballydehob may blow the dust from his short wave tubes and sit late into the morning hours to pick up some word of the contest.

The Voice of a Woman Singing

DANNO'S HOME, WHERE THE ELDER O'MAHONY still coaxes cabbages from his undulating acres, stands on a rise where golden-grown grass and hawthorne hedges fringe the road. There is a little cone of stones nearby where foot travelers have pitched a cobbler or a pebble as propitiation to the spot where folklore says the fairies lurk.

Through the years the cairn has grown tall. There is a pulpit-like boulder toward the village where Ann Parnell, sister of the "Uncrowned King of Ireland," once harangued the countrymen on some forgotten question of civil liberties, and a turbid stream winds in the little distance whence the town of Ballydehob got its name, meaning "The jaws of the two fords."

The single-storied school where Danno, and his brothers, Florie and Paddy, learned their first fundamentals, is a half-mile below the O'Mahony farm, and one may see its chimney pots through a cleft in the slope.

I remember in passing there was the voice of a woman singing, a thin ribbon of sound that went with the wind, and the old father, still tall though he stooped, leaned on his hay fork and watched solemnly till my car was hidden by a dip in the road. For strangers in the Cork cooleens are rare, and motors come seldom, so that men in the fields rise from their work to stare, glad of a chance to wonder.

Welcome by the Wayside

"THE CHILDREN WERE GOING HOME" is a song that is heard in the hills and valleys of the west of Ireland. It is a song of welcome, and it is a song of farewell. It is a song that is heard in the hills and valleys of the west of Ireland. It is a song of welcome, and it is a song of farewell. It is a song that is heard in the hills and valleys of the west of Ireland. It is a song of welcome, and it is a song of farewell.

Torrents of Silver Dollars

WESTWARD, THIRTY MILES AS THE BITTERN flies, lie the towns of Snerem, though it is nearer seventy-five over the roads that sometimes swing to a turnpike and sometimes divide to a steep rise. You turn South at Kenmare and move through rumpled land like rain on a fruit cake. Cottages with plumes of lavender smoke angle in the hollows, and the small Kerry mountain cows, black and limous, scramble through the haws at the first sound of your motor.

It is a world of rolling hills and valleys, of green and brown and white and red, of a land where the hills are like a sea of green and the valleys are like a sea of brown. The hills are like a sea of green and the valleys are like a sea of brown. The hills are like a sea of green and the valleys are like a sea of brown. The hills are like a sea of green and the valleys are like a sea of brown.

And it is in the sea where the town of Snerem lies, a little inland from a headland where the sea is like a sea of green and the hills are like a sea of brown. The hills are like a sea of green and the valleys are like a sea of brown. The hills are like a sea of green and the valleys are like a sea of brown. The hills are like a sea of green and the valleys are like a sea of brown.

HIGHER Auto Prices SEEN

WILL CURTAIL DEMAND

It is possible that the prospective increase in the normal demand for automobiles this year will be modified by a rise in the year's average price for motor cars, says the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

There is talk at the present time of a 10 per cent price advance. On the basis of present costs, it is apparent that higher prices are needed.

Workers in the automobile firms are now receiving an average wage of about 86 cents per hour. This compares with 76 a year ago and with an annual average of 70 cents at the low for the depression.

1933. As compared with the pre-depression wage of 75 cents in 1929, the present figure is 14.6 per cent higher. This represents a real increase in labor costs since the output per man-hour is certainly no higher now than in 1914 and is possibly lower as some evidence indicates.

In addition to higher labor costs there has been a sharp increase in the price of raw materials.

BUYING POWER LACKING

New York, July 13—Buying power was lacking in most of today's stock market departments, and many of yesterday's leaders settled down behind minor gains.

Loses of fractions to around 2 points predominated after the fourth hour.

Bonds exhibited early improvement but became uneven as the session progressed. Where futures

New York, July 13—Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and Intellectual leaders of the A. F. of M., note that at the proper time leaders of the labor movement would back legislation to set up standards of responsibility for labor unions.

This seemed an important aid measure, for up to now legislation for regulation of labor unions has been

TIMELY TOPICS

There is a lot of economic data some market analysts expressed the view that seasonally adjusted figures for the third quarter of 1980 will be better than those for the second quarter. It is not, however, unlikely to show any further recovery in the economy.

The Federal Reserve Board's index of production for the third quarter of 1980 is expected to show only a slight downturn in the third quarter of 1980, and the decline would be due to a drop in the steel industry caused by the steel strike.

Despite the fact that retail sales for the third quarter of 1980 have fallen, the economy has a heavy turnover in the same 1980 year.

N. Y. Bank Stocks
New York City's Federal Reserve

not be a party to the proposed merger of the New York City Federal Reserve Bank and the New York City Federal Reserve Bank.
There was shocking frankness in the statement. The bank said it they included the subjoined announcement.

announcement of a merger
for a recovery measure.
The bank has a right to
